Actions to stop doing:

Currently, the team does not have anything that is inhibiting progress. The meetings are correctly timed and everyone is present, and code progression is smooth and on track with the sprint plan.

Actions to start doing:

The team should start adding .yml files to github to automatically test if the product will build correctly after merging changes onto the main branch. The team should also develop and follow a standard when naming branches for pull requests, and have a similar naming convention for variables. Another practice to start doing would be to add simple documentation on pull requests so the reviewer has an easier time understanding the changes.

Actions to keep doing:

The team likes the standard three meetings per week, with flexible date changes, as well as any additional meetings whenever they feel they are necessary to get work done. The team also believes in continuing to submit pull requests upon the completion of new features so that other members have a chance to understand what changes have been made, and also ensure code will merge properly.
